

Speaking Evaluations Explained

One-to-One Speaking Evaluations

Why

Korean teachers might have parent meetings soon and would like to have feedback from native teachers to show to the parents. NETs see students for 1/3 of their time in elementary, but parents rarely get feedback from us, so this is a great way to provide some. The evaluation will also be considered for their level-up score for the next semester.

When

See current term schedule

Online essay can be taught for the first class of the week and evaluations can be done in the second class (evaluations should be all completed within 1 lesson if possible). If you have an especially large class, you could start the evaluations during the online essay lesson when students are writing their essays (This might only be possible for higher level students).

How

They will be done as one-to-one evaluations (not speeches) outside of the classroom (in the hallway). The purpose of these evaluations is to score how well students can engage in conversation, not give prepared speeches.

As this will be done during our class time, the other students will need an activity to complete while waiting for their turn / after they have done it. The Daechi team leader is happy for students to prepare for their evaluations if the NET allows, work on their online essay or do homework (if the KT is happy with that too). In the past, we have also used activity packets which are available on Dropbox. (Elementary → 7 – Speaking Evaluations → Big Books of Fun).

Class Flow

- Explain speaking evaluations
- Explain the evaluation form
- Set the work/activities that students can complete when waiting
- Set up outside the classroom and begin the evaluations
 - o Evaluation length (Depends on class size and how long the set-up takes)

Notes on Evaluation Length

- If you have a full class of 15/16 students, the timing would roughly be
 - o 5/10 minutes for set up
 - o 2 minutes speaking per student
 - o 1 minute for change over between students
- For 10ish students
 - o 5/10 minutes for set up
 - o 3 minutes speaking per student
 - o 1 minute for change over between students
- For smaller classes
 - o Spend 3 or 4 minutes per students and then either help them with the online essay or teach some of the SP lesson for the rest of the time.

Tips

I know that many teachers have never done this before and it can be fairly busy with larger classes. Here are some tips to help.

- Hopefully, all/most students will be offline. If not, they can be done on zoom using a breakout room. (I don't think they would need to be recorded, but you can double check with your KTs)
- If you are worried about timings for bigger classes, explain or even start the speaking evaluations at the end of the Online Essay class.
- Not all the questions should be asked. You can pick as you go depending on the level.
- Tell students to talk for as long as possible and give plenty of details and reasons.
- To keep the preparation time fair, you can have students only see the questions before their turn. This could be organized by writing the evaluation order on the board at the start of class.
- You could allow low-level students to see the questions beforehand and choose which questions they will answer. For high-level students, you could give them the questions, but you pick which ones they answer.
- Make it clear that students need to come quickly when it is their turn. I normally have the student who just finished tell the next student. KTs are good about making sure they come out quickly. However, if they drag their feet when coming to the hallway, it can really slow down the process.
- You may need to move a small desk and two chairs into the hallway. Ask if they can be left in the hallway for the whole week to speed up the process.
- I normally discreetly grade (small dots in the box) and make quick notes when the student is talking. Then, while waiting for the next student, I complete the grades and add my comments. For larger classes, I may just make some additional notes and finish the comments later to ensure I can complete the evaluations for all students in one class.
- Some teachers find it easier to complete the evaluation forms on their computer.
- Please try and ensure all evaluations are done in one class. If one or two students need to do it in the next lesson, it can quickly be done at the end of class or during the break time.

Questions and Evaluation Forms

The grading form and questions can both be found on dropbox. Teachers are free to pick and choose the questions from the list provided 15-20 is a good amount.
